NEW ZEALAND HISTORY

from Auckland

Two books to appear later in 1977 cover vital areas of New Zealand history with a detail and authority which will make them standard works.

The Maori Population of New Zealand, 1769-1971, by D. Ian Pool, is a demographic study of fertility, mortality, overall numbers, internal migration, and other aspects of the Maori population, which has had many features of the 'third world' set within a typical 'Western' society. About $8.35.

Fatal Necessity: British Intervention in New Zealand, 1830-1847, by Peter Adams. The arguments of interests pressing for British intervention in New Zealand, and of those opposed to it, have long been known. This study shows how they weighed with British ministers struggling to shape the outcome. About $13.60.

NEW ZEALAND HISTORY

Edward Gibbon Wakefield in New Zealand — his political career

1854-4 by Peter Stuart. 196 pages, paperback, only $2.50. This book has had very good reviews and is acknowledged to be a sound and useful study of a fascinating story: Wakefield's sudden burst into colonial politics, and his equally sudden removal two years later.

"... makes fascinating reading." - Helen Taft Manning in American Historical Review.

The Webbs in New Zealand, 1898 (Beatrice Webb's diary with entries by Sidney Webb) edited by D.A. Hamer (Department of History, Victoria University): $2.50. The first edition of this published diary appeared in 1959, and must have been the most reviewed book of the decade. It sold out in a few months.

Now we have a new edition, published in 1974, edited by Professor Hamer. The new book is beautifully designed, and gives a fresh and interesting look at New Zealand politics at the turn of the century.

The Origins of New Zealand Diplomacy: the Agent General in London 1870-1905 by Raewyn Dalziel, $3.60.

The book is about the successive Agents General who represented New Zealand in London — Featherston, Vogel, Dillon Bell, Perceval and, of course, Reeves. It shows how each successive Agent General enlarged the scope and stature of the office and reveals interesting similarities between colonial and present day concerns.

"... meticulous probing and exhaustive ... crisply written."
... — NZ International Review.

We are publishing these books with Victoria University Press in the hope that the series will grow to be a shelf of well-written scholarly paperbacks that will be useful to history teachers and students, and to a wider audience as well.

The Turanga Journals — The Missionary Journals of Jane and William Williams, edited by Frances Porter.

This substantial collection of edited journals, letters and diaries is preceded and followed by scholarly but lively commentaries by Mrs Porter.

This big book has had good reviews.
