BERNARD VIENNE

Maître de Recherches à l'ORSTOM

GENS DE MOTLAV

Idéologie et pratique sociale
en Mélanésie

Publication de la Société des Océanistes No 42
Musée de l'Homme, Paris 1984

This book gives us the results of a long field work carried out in the north of Vanuatu (formerly New Hebrides) on Banks Islands, main center of classic anthropology (Codrington, 1891; Rivers, 1914) and of its theoretical debates. Weaving the monograph approach of the societies of the Motlav, Ureparapara, Vanua Lava and Mota islands, with theoretical thought, Bernard Vienne — in the manner of Evans-Pritchard in The Nuer — extricates the ecological background of the region in its relationship to Melanesian conceptualisations (organization of space and time). Then, in three masterly chapters, he analyzes from first hand documentation, the social organization of Banks Islands (dualism, marriage, residence and kinship), its native theoretical readings and the general problems it poses for anthropology. Finally this work gives us the finest description to date of the political system: the hierarchy of grades (stape), an original and complex variation on the model of big men societies.

Here, Bernard Vienne ties together the perspective of the best Anglo-Saxon monographs and the important contribution of modern French theories to the problems of kinship and marriage.
