

Notes on Contributors

Nadia Gush completed an MA on Cora Wilding and the Sunlight League at Canterbury University in 2003. She then undertook a PhD at Victoria University of Wellington on cultural citizenships. Nadia is currently working on turning her PhD into a book.

Francis Lucien Reid is an historian of science whose research focuses on scientific institutions, astronomy, religion and the environment in Britain and its Empire during the period from Cook's first voyage to the end of the nineteenth century. His PhD thesis, which he completed at the University of Cambridge in 2007, investigated the formation and early years of the New Zealand Institute — late-nineteenth century New Zealand's premier scientific society. His publications include studies of astronomy in the context of Empire- and career-building, the astronomical beliefs of the Muggletonians, and the importance of class in scientific and intellectual culture. He is currently working as a strategy analyst in the New Zealand dairy industry.

Rachael Bell is a PhD student at Massey University, Palmerston North. Her research interests are centred around historiography, particularly the relationship between the construction of history and the intellectual, political and social influences at the time of its writing. Her PhD thesis is an examination of New Zealand's Official War Histories of World War Two.

Graham Hucker is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Educational Studies at Massey University in Palmerston North, where he teaches a course to graduate students on the teaching of history. He has a PhD in History from Massey University titled, 'The Rural Home Front': A New Zealand Region and the Great War, 1914–1926'. Graham can be contacted by email at G.J.Hucker@massey.ac.nz

New Zealand Journal of History Graduate Essay Prize

This prize was established by the Management Board of the New Zealand Journal of History to encourage graduate students to submit articles to the NZJH based on papers presented at the NZHA Conference.

To be eligible for the prize graduate students must present a paper at the 2009 New Zealand Historical Association conference and then rework the presentation into a journal article. They must submit the article to the NZJH by 1 February 2010. A committee of judges (drawn from the Journal's Editorial Advisory Group) will then select the winner. The winner will receive a two-year subscription to the Journal and $200.00. Subject to satisfactory readers' reports the winning article may also be published.

The judges' decision will be final and no correspondence will be entered into.

The Beating Heart: A Political and Socio-economic History of Te Arawa

Vincent O'Malley and David Armstrong

This new book details the determined efforts since the 1830s of Te Arawa tribes to work with the Crown and settlers to pursue a relationship under the Treaty. The Beating Heart exposes Te Arawa's struggles and successes to get to where they stand today in Aotearoa and the world. A must have for anyone interested in New Zealand history.
